

Future 500 Project

William Kerney

Introduction

In this project, I used a dataset from a fictional magazine called “Future 500”. They have tasked me to create some draft visualizations for their upcoming online publication given a list of 500 supplied companies. They have requested the following charts: A scatter plot classified by industry showing revenue, expenses, profit. A scatter plot that includes industry trends for the expenses~revenue relationship. **Boxplots showing growth by industry.* and have noted that the dataset has numerous discrepancies that need to be addressed before analysis can be performed.

Having Read and installed ggplot2,graphics,grDevices,readr, and tidyverse libraries we begin our analysis.

First we read in our CSV to a dataframe.

#Assigning and storing our data in a dataframe
fin<-read.csv("P3-Future-500-The-Dataset.csv",na.strings = "")

We then examine our data to evaluate the structure, and make the necessary adjustments to allow us to perform calculations during the analysis.

#Reviewing dataframe

Converting factors to non-factors to enable us to calculate by eliminating commas from the “Expenses” and “Revenue” columns among other imperfections in order to make number readable to R.

Then located missing data in the dataset and determine what solution to pursue in each case.

- In the “Revenue”, “Employees”, and “Growth” I determined it would be best to proxy the industry median of the columns to give us the best output while avoiding outliers as much as possible.

- In the “Industry” column I chose to remove the rows with records that had blank industry cells, industry is important to our final analysis; doing this only removes 2 of 1000 rows from our data.
- In the “Inception” column, I chose to leave cells empty because it was deemed not vital to know the inception year for our analysis.
- In the “State” column, I chose to fill the empty cells with rows from city in the column to the right in the spreadsheet since I knew the cities and corresponding states with 100% certainty.
- I was also able to calculate the “Expenses” column with 100% certainty using a “Revenue-Profit = Expenses” calculation.
- In one specific case, we have to proxy the industry median of expenses and revenue to get profit
